With house prices down, buying an older property and 'doing it up' is becoming very popular, and with other homeowners improving the space they've already got, the renovation and home improvement market is worth an estimated £15 billion each year, with over 300,000 planning applications submitted for extensions, refurbishments, conversions and other home improvements.

Whether you want to improve your current home, or looking for an older property to bring back to life, chances are you will have to tackle some tricky property problems to create your dream home. If you are upgrading, improving or refurbishing your property, head to the Renovating & Remodelling Weekend at the National Self Build & Renovation Centre in Swindon this month. The event will offer all the expert advice, guidance and information you need to save you time, money and hassle.

You can get tips on finding and assessing a renovation project, speak to leading industry experts, including architects, building control officers, surveyors, CAD designers and conservation experts, and get the inside knowledge from renovators who have completed their own projects. Advice and information is also available from Velux, the Listed Property Owners Club, pickupaproperty and the National Home Improvement Council. Visitors will also have the opportunity to discover how to tackle the most common property problems in the EDF Energy Renovation House, and learn about the latest innovations and products for your renovation project, including energy-efficient and renewable technology.
